ON paper, this party sounded like a bizarre and reckless social experiment: take the entire Bra Boys gang, a rival bikie gang, a football team, everyone from Maroubra, some celebrities and pillars of society and squeeze them all into the venerable State Theatre. In reality, it was madder still.

Down the red carpet poured the Boys, tattoos hidden beneath their best suits, mums and grans in tow. While Maroubra filled Market Street, stretch Hummers delivered Sunny and Koby Abberton and Russell Crowe, flanked by the bulk of the South Sydney team. By now, a curious crowd had brought the entire block to a standstill. And then the Comancheros came roaring through the melee on their bikes and joined one of the strangest spectacles this city has ever seen.

Inside, chaos reigned. The throng
